21 THE COURT: Before the Court is the city's motion to 22 approve its settlement of the claims asserted by creditors
23 Merrill Lynch and UBS. UBS and Merrill Lynch's predecessor
24 in interest, SBS Financial Products Company, were the parties 25 to swaps contracts that were associated with the city's 2005

1 and 2006 transactions which involved its issuances of $1.5
2 billion dollars worth of certificates of participation.
3 These certificates of participation were issued by the city
4 to assist with its unfunded liabilities of its two pension 5 plans at that time.

6 This is the third settlement that these parties 7 reached. The first was for $230 million. The second was for 8 $165 million. On January 16 of this year, following the 9 evidentiary hearing on the city's request for approval of the 10 second settlement, the Court rejected that settlement finding 11 that under the standards adopted in the Sixth Circuit's 12 decision in Bard, the settlement amount was too high given 13 the strengths and weaknesses of the parties' claims, 14 counterclaims, and defenses. The Court did, however, 15 strongly encourage the parties to continue their 16 negotiations, which they did, eventually reaching the 17 settlement that is now before the Court for approval. This 18 current settlement obligates the city to pay $85 million, 19 which is about a 70-percent discount in its termination fee
20 obligation of about $288 million to the swaps counterparties.

21 The record before the Court consists of the evidence 22 submitted at the prior hearing and at the hearing held last 23 week in connection with this motion. The Court's detailed 24 findings of fact and conclusions of law from the previous 25 hearing are, to the extent pertinent, adopted for purposes of

1 resolving this motion, and the Court will not restate those 2 findings and conclusions here. The record reflects no 3 grounds to reconsider any of those findings or conclusions.

4           The Court will now review in some detail the primary 5 features of the present settlement. The city agrees to grant 6 the swap counterparties an allowed secured claim in the 7 amount of $42.5 million each secured by the city's casino
8 revenue. The total settlement is, therefore, $85 million.
9 During the pendency of the agreement, the city will not 10 commence or prosecute any litigation against the swap 11 counterparties. If either of the service corporations or any 12 other person commences such litigation, the city will 13 cooperate with and support the defense of the litigation by 14 the swap counterparty defendant. The city also will not 15 grant any other liens to be senior or in pari passu with 16 these liens on the casino revenue. Either when the 17 settlement amount is paid -- excuse me. When the settlement 18 amount is paid, the city will automatically release its 19 claims against the swap counterparties. If the service 20 corporations or any other entity are collapsed into the city, 21 any claim that the entity might have against the swap 22 counterparties will also be released. The city will not 23 propose a plan that treats the swap counterparties less 24 favorably than as provided in the settlement agreement.

25           As a defense against any claim, the city retains the

1 right to argue the invalidity of any transaction document
2 defined as including the collateral agreement, the swap 3 insurance policies, the 2006 transactions, the city pledges, 4 the service corporation security interest, the service
5 corporation pledge, the authorizing ordinance, the definitive 6 documents, and the settlement transaction as long as the city
7 is not seeking affirmative recovery from the swap
8 counterparties. Upon the payment of $85 million, the liens 9 on the pledged property will be released, and the swap
10 counterparties will withdraw their proofs of claim. So long 11 as the city is not in breach of the settlement agreement, the 12 swap counterparties will not attempt to trap the casino 13 revenue from the city, and if the custodian tries to trap the 14 casino revenue, the swap counterparties will use their best 15 efforts to help fix -- to help the city fix the problem.

16           Once the settlement is paid, the swap counterparties 17 agree to the same release of claims against the city as the 18 city agrees to release against the swap counterparties. The 19 agreement excludes the release of claims by the swap
20 counterparties against the service corporations to the extent 21 the service corporations are not collapsed into the city.
22 The swap counterparties agree to vote in favor of the city's 23 plan as long as it treats their claims no less favorably than 24 those claims are treated in the agreement. The swap 25 counterparties retain their right to terminate the swap

1 agreement; however, they will not be able to hold the city
2 liable for any termination fee. The swap counterparties
3 retain all rights, claims, and remedies related to the swap 4 agreements or to the swap insurance parties against any 5 person that is not a party to the settlement agreement, 6 including claims against the service corporations, Syncora,
7 or FGIC, so long as the claim does not result in the swap
8 insurer receiving an allowed secured claim for reimbursement
9 or subrogation against the city. The swap counterparties 10 retain the right to intervene in the COPs litigation. The 11 settlement agreement bars the service corporations from, 12 quote, "commencing any litigation or taking any other action 13 that the service corporations would not have been able to 14 commence or take if the service corporations were a party to 15 the agreement and obligated to the same extent as the city 16 under the agreement," close quote. So the service 17 corporations are barred from making any claims against the 18 swap counterparties relating to any of the underlying 19 transaction documents.

20           The settlement agreement contains a bar order and 21 judgment reduction provision for claims by third parties.
22 This provision bars all parties from asserting any claim for 23 noncontractual indemnity or contribution against any swap 24 counterparty. However, if a court determines that a 25 barred -- that barred claims exist that would give rise to

1 liability of any swap counterparty to a barred person but for 2 the barred order -- the bar order, the barred person shall be 3 entitled to judgment reduction provisions set forth in the 4 order.

5           The city will pay off the $85 million in monthly 6 installments of approximately $4.2 million into the existing 7 lockbox structure. These are the monthly holdback payments.
8 The custodian will release the funds to the swap
9 counterparties quarterly. These are the quarterly payments.
10 The city's payments are payable without interest until 11 October 15th, 2014. After that date, the city's payments
12 will begin to bear interest at the same rate as post-petition 13 financing plus 1.5 percent plus a 1-percent deferral fee. On 14 the effective date of the city's plan, which may or may not 15 be before October 15th, 2014, the city does plan to pay off 16 the balance of the $85 million to the swap counterparties
17 with exit financing. If the city is unable to obtain exit 18 financing, this is a liquidity event. The city will then 19 have 180 days following the effective date of the plan to pay 20 the balance in full. The city agrees to use the first 21 dollars after the post-petition facility is paid off of any 22 net proceeds of any financing or refinancing consummated in 23 the plan that is either supported by the full faith and 24 credit of the city or payable from general funds of the city
25 to pay off the balance.

1           That is a summary of the settlement agreement that 2 is before the Court. The city contends that this settlement
3 is a reasonable settlement of the claims of UBS and Merrill
4 Lynch given the strengths and weakness of the parties' 5 claims, counterclaims, and defenses, as the Court detailed in 6 its previous ruling. It is, of course, supported also by UBS
7 and Merrill Lynch.

8           The city contends that the benefits of the 9 settlement include the following. First, the settlement 10 amount is reduced and the payments are extended, and because 11 of that, the city no longer needs post-petition financing to 12 settle its obligations under the swap contracts. Second, the 13 swap counterparties will release their claims against the 14 city and vote in favor of its plan of adjustment. Third, the 15 city will have greater certainty regarding its cash flows and 16 liquidity. Fourth, the city will have continued access to 17 its casino revenues, which is a stable source of significant 18 revenues for city operations. Fifth, it will simplify future 19 financing efforts. Sixth, it facilitates settlements with 20 other creditors by providing an impaired accepting class as 21 required by 11 U.S.C., Section 1129(a)(10). And, seventh, it 22 avoids protracted and expensive litigation that will impair 23 its ability to reorganize efficiently.

24           The Court concludes that the record fully supports 25 the city's view of these benefits. Accordingly, the Court

1 finds that these benefits are real and substantial and 2 justify granting the motion.

3           The Court will now address whether the settlement
4 must, nevertheless, be rejected for one of the other reasons
5 advanced by the objecting parties. These objections 6 generally do not go to the economic reasonableness of the 7 settlement but whether the structure of the settlement is 8 legally permissible. The record reflects several objections 9 to the settlement that have been resolved with additions to 10 the proposed order approving the settlement. However, 11 several creditors maintain objections to the settlement on 12 the following grounds. First, one party, David Sole, 13 contends that the amount of the settlement is still too high 14 in light of the potential recovery that the city could have 15 against UBS and Merrill Lynch on its counterclaims against 16 them. Second, Syncora contends that the settlement cannot be 17 approved as a matter of law because it unlawfully impairs its 18 contract rights. Third, the objectors contend that the 19 settlement cannot be approved because the city's grant of a 20 lien in its gaming revenues to UBS and Merrill Lynch is 21 unlawful under state law. Fourth, the objectors contend that 22 the settlement cannot be approved because it impairs the 23 rights of the two service corporations even though they were 24 not parties to this settlement.

25           The Court concludes that each of the outstanding

1 objections to the settlement lack merit, and, accordingly,
2 the motion to approve the settlement should be granted.
3 Specifically, the Court finds that the amount of the 4 settlement is reasonable and quite fairly compromises the 5 parties' various claims, counterclaims, and defenses, all of 6 which were previously reviewed by this Court. While it is 7 true, as Mr. Sole asserts, that there is a possibility that 8 the city could recover substantial amounts from the swap 9 counterparties, perhaps as much as 300 to $400 million, the 10 Court had previously found that the likelihood of that 11 outcome was uncertain. Indeed, the record was and now 12 remains such that the Court cannot find that there is a 13 reasonable likelihood of success on these counterclaims. In 14 any event, the Court further previously found that it was 15 certain that any such litigation would be expensive and, 16 considering appeals, would take years. Nothing in the 17 hearing last week -- in the record of the hearing last week 18 undermines that finding. In these circumstances, therefore, 19 the Court finds that despite that possible favorable outcome 20 for the city, the settlement amount of $85 is entirely 21 reasonable and fairly compromises all of the claims between 22 the parties.

23           Syncora contends that the settlement impermissibly
24 impairs its rights. It relies on In re. SportsStuff, 430
25 B.R. 170, Bankruptcy Appellate Panel, Eighth Circuit, 2012.

1 In that case, the proposed settlement would have improperly 2 imposed an injunction precluding nonsettling parties from 3 enforcing their rights against insurers. However, the Court 4 concludes that nothing in this settlement agreement here 5 enjoins or otherwise prevents Syncora from pursuing any 6 rights that it may have. Further, the bar order provision in 7 this settlement agreement is limited to preventing potential 8 defendants in suits brought by the city from asserting claims 9 for contribution or indemnification against the swap 10 counterparties. Such defendants are not prejudiced, however, 11 because any recovery from the city against them would be 12 reduced accordingly. In In re. Greektown Holdings, LLC, 728
13 F.3d 567, 579, Sixth Circuit, 2013, the Court specifically 14 approved of this very kind of limited bar order. The Court 15 stated, quote, "when the scope of a bar order is limited to 16 claims for contribution or indemnity, the court can 17 compensate the non-settling defendants for the loss of those 18 claims by reducing any future judgment against them," close 19 quote.

20 Syncora also contends that Section 6.9.2(2) of the 21 2006 contract administration agreement gives it the right to 22 control all actions of the swap counterparties. Syncora
23 asserts that the provision in the settlement agreement 24 requiring the swap counterparties to vote in favor of the 25 plan interferes with that right. Section 6.9.2 of the 1 contract administration agreement provides, quote,

2 "Notwithstanding any other provision hereof, any Insurer not 3 then in default under its Credit Insurance shall, (1) be 4 treated as the Holder of all Outstanding Certificates equal 5 to the principal amount of Certificates insured by it for the 6 purposes of actions permitted to be taken by 7 Certificateholders under this title and for the purpose of 8 giving all other consents, directions and waivers that the 9 Certificateholders may give; and (2) control all action that 10 may be taken by any Specified Hedge Counterparty that is the 11 beneficiary of such Credit Insurance, including for purposes
12 of actions permitted to be taken by such Specified Hedge 13 Counterparty under this Agreement and for the purposes of 14 giving all other directions, consents and waivers that such 15 Hedge Counterparty may give," close quote. The Court 16 concludes that this provision does not give Syncora the right 17 to control the votes of the swap counterparties on the city's 18 plan of adjustment. Further, to the extent that Syncora 19 concludes that the swap counterparties are in violation of 20 the contract administration agreement, nothing in the 21 settlement agreement impairs Syncora's right to assert a 22 breach of contract claim.

23           Syncora contends that the settlement agreement 24 operates as an impermissible termination or amendment of the 25 2009 collateral agreement without its consent. The Court

1 must reject this argument also. First, the settlement
2 agreement does not terminate the collateral agreement either 3 expressly or by implication, and the parties to the 4 settlement agreement do not contend that the collateral 5 agreement is terminated. Further, the requirements for 6 termination in Section 14.4 have not been satisfied. Second, 7 the Court concludes that the settlement agreement also does 8 not operate as an amendment in contravention of Syncora's 9 rights under Section 14.5. The settlement agreement is a 10 compromise of claims, not an amendment to an existing 11 agreement. In In re. Residential Capital, LLC, 497 B.R. 720, 12 748, Bankruptcy, Southern District of New York, 2003, the 13 Court noted that a settlement agreement is not an amendment 14 to an underlying agreement but a resolution of a claim.
15 Finally, nothing suggests that Syncora is a third-party 16 beneficiary of the collateral agreement or that it has any 17 rights arising from it except as the agreement specifically 18 provides. For these reasons, the Court overrules these 19 objections to the settlement that Syncora asserted.

20 Both the Official Committee of Retirees and Syncora
21 objected to the proposed settlement agreement on the grounds 22 that the service corporations are not parties to the 23 agreement. The proposed settlement contemplates a release of 24 the lien on casino revenues once the $85 million is paid to 25 the swap counterparties. In the collateral agreement dated

1 June 15, 2009, the swap counterparties were not granted the 2 lien directly from the city. Rather, they hold the lien by 3 way of a pledge from the city to the service corporations and 4 from the service corporations to the swap counterparties.
5 The objectors assert that as a result, the proposed 6 settlement cannot be approved without the service 7 corporations. Here it must be noted again that Syncora was 8 not a party to the collateral agreement, although it did 9 consent to it. The record reflects that on March 12, 2014, 10 the service corporations were served with the present motion 11 to approve the settlement. See Docket Number 3061. Neither 12 of the service corporations, however, filed an objection to 13 the motion. Therefore, by implication, at least, they 14 acquiesce in the motion.

15           The Court concludes that this objection should be 16 overruled. The city granted a lien on the casino revenues
17 directly to the service corporations, and the service 18 corporations immediately granted all of their interest in 19 those revenues to the swap counterparties. Pursuant to the 20 express terms of the collateral agreement, the counterparties
21 have an interest in casino revenues and a right to compromise 22 that interest. The collateral agreement is fairly 23 straightforward. Under Section 4.1, the city granted the 24 service corporations a security interest in the revenues to 25 secure the city's payment obligations to the service

1 corporations. Under Section 4.2, the service corporations 2 then granted the swap counterparties a security interest in 3 their right to payment from the city and in the casino 4 revenue. Under Section 11 of the collateral agreement, the 5 swap counterparties' remedies include the exercise of all
6 rights and remedies otherwise available to the service 7 corporations as secured parties under the city pledge. This 8 ostensibly gives the counterparties the ability to exercise 9 any rights which the service corporations have under the 10 collateral agreement, including the right to enter into a 11 reasonable settlement with the city. The objectors do not 12 contend that this two-step pledge, per se, is legally invalid 13 nor do they explain why, if the service corporations have the 14 legal capacity to discharge the lien pursuant to the rights
15 and powers granted to them by the city's pledge, that same 16 legal capacity to discharge the lien did not pass to the swap 17 counterparties pursuant to the service corporations' pledge.
18 Further, the terms of the contract are consistent with the 19 Michigan Uniform Commercial Code, which recognizes that when 20 a party pledges a right to payment, the collateral securing 21 that right to payment follows. MCL, Section 440.9203(7), 22 provides, quote, "The attachment of a security interest in a 23 right to payment or performance secured by a security 24 interest or other lien on personal or real property is also 25 an attachment of a security interest in the security

1 interest, mortgage or other lien," close quote. When a right
2 to payment is pledged, therefore, the pledgee has the right 3 to enforce that right to payment upon default, including the 4 enforcement of accompanying liens.

5 MCLA, Section 440.9607, provides, quote, "(1) If so 6 agreed, and in any event after default, a secured party may 7 do 1 or more of the following: (a) Notify an account debtor 8 or other person obligated on collateral to make payment or 9 otherwise render performance to or for the benefit of the 10 secured party; (c) Enforce the obligations of an account 11 debtor or other person obligated on the collateral and 12 exercise the rights of the debtor with respect to the 13 obligation of the account debtor or other person obligated on 14 collateral to make payment or otherwise render performance to 15 the debtor, and with respect to any property that secures the 16 obligations of the account debtor or any other person 17 obligated on the collateral," close quote. In addition, 18 comment nine to MCLA, Section 440.9607, also notes that the 19 secured party's collection and enforcement rights include the 20 right to settle and compromise claims against the account 21 debtor.

22 Because the swap counterparties' interest in the 23 casino revenue is co-extensive with the interest of the 24 service corporations that were granted by the city and 25 because the service corporations have not objected to the

1 settlement, the Court concludes that the failure to include 2 the service corporations in this proposed settlement does not 3 preclude its approval.

4           The remaining objections relate to what the Court
5 will refer to as the collateral structure for the settlement
6 agreement. The objecting parties, primarily the Retirement
7 Systems, the Retiree Committee, the retiree association
8 parties, and the COPs holders, assert that the settlement 9 agreement cannot be approved because it provides, in effect, 10 for the swap counterparties to be treated as secured parties 11 under the city's plan of adjustment. Indeed, paragraph 10 of 12 the proposed order approving the settlement provides, quote, 13 "Ordered that each of UBS and MLCS are hereby granted an 14 allowed claim (collectively, the 'Secured Claims') against 15 the City secured by liens on the Pledged Property (the 16 'Liens'), which, solely for purposes of distributions from 17 the City, shall be deemed to be in the aggregate amount -- 18 aggregate principal amount of $42,500,000 for each of UBS and 19 MLCS," close quote.

20           The objecting parties assert that because this Court 21 found that the city is reasonably likely to succeed on its 22 challenges to the collateral agreement under the Michigan
23 Gaming Control Act, the swap counterparties should be treated 24 as unsecured creditors in the city's plan of adjustment.
25 Some of the objectors also argue that the settlement

1 agreement cannot be approved because the pledge of the casino 2 revenue under the collateral agreement is illegal and that 3 the Court cannot rule on this motion without first resolving 4 the question of whether the pledge is legal. Stated another 5 way, the objectors argue that by approving the settlement 6 agreement, which allows the pledge of casino revenue to 7 continue until the $85 million settlement amount is fully 8 paid off, the Court is giving its approval to a potentially 9 illegal security interest.

10 The Court concludes that neither objection has 11 merit. It is beyond serious dispute -- it is beyond serious 12 dispute that when a creditor asserts a secured claim against 13 a debtor and the debtor or other parties dispute the validity 14 of the lien, the parties can agree not to challenge the 15 validity of the disputed lien in exchange for the creditors' 16 agreement to accept a lesser payment on its secured claim.
17 Such an agreement is, of course, subject to the Bankruptcy 18 Court's approval under Rule 9019 standards and the 19 requirements of the Bankruptcy Code. For example, in In re.
20 Hooper, 2012 WL 603766, Ninth Circuit, Bankruptcy Appellate 21 Panel, February 14, 2012, the Ninth Circuit Bankruptcy
22 Appellate Panel affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's approval of a 23 settlement in which a lender accepted a reduced claim against 24 the estate to settle an adversary proceeding in which the 25 trustee alleged that the lender held an invalid deed of 1 trust.

2 In Six West Retail Acquisition, Inc. v. Loews
3 Cineplex, 286 B.R. 239, Southern District of New York, 2002,
4 the District Court affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's approval
5 of a settlement in which the unsecured creditors' committee 6 agreed not to seek avoidance of certain liens and mortgages
7 granted to creditors as part of a pre-petition restructuring
8 in exchange for the new investors' agreement to commit $45 9 million for distribution to unsecured creditors.

10 Another example is this Court's own decision in In 11 re. Collins & Aikman, Case Number 05-55927, which this Court 12 presided over in 2005 and 2006. There a creditor, Huron Mold
13 & Tools, alleged that it had a first priority statutory lien
14 in the debtor's molds pursuant to the Michigan Mold Lien Act.
15 Huron Mold & Tools asserted a secured claim in the amount of 16 approximately $1.4 million. The debtor disputed the validity 17 of the mold liens. However, rather than litigating the 18 liens, the debtor agreed to allow Huron Mold a secured claim 19 in the amount of $350,000. In exchange, Huron agreed to 20 waive, release, and discharge all of its alleged liens on the 21 debtor's molds.

22 The compromise submitted for the Court's approval 23 here today in this case is indistinguishable from these 24 examples. The swap counterparties have asserted claims 25 against the city for the present value of the remaining life

1 of the swap agreement. As the city explained at the hearing, 2 this amount varies depending on prevailing interest rates,
3 but it is estimated in the hundreds of millions of dollars.
4 Alternatively, the swap counterparties could terminate the 5 swap agreement because the city has long been in default.
6 They could then file a claim for this termination fee 7 estimated, as noted, to be in the hundreds of millions of 8 dollars. Either way, the swap counterparties have taken the 9 arguable position that their claims are secured by the casino
10 revenue. The city disputes the validity of the swap 11 counterparties' alleged security interest in the casino 12 revenue, but, much like the debtor in Collins & Aikman, the 13 city seeks to resolve its potential liability under the swap 14 agreement and to relieve itself of the alleged liens on the 15 casino revenue without having to litigate the issues by 16 allowing a substantially reduced secured claim. As the city 17 argues, nothing in law requires the city to litigate the 18 validity of the lien. Rather, the law allows the settlement 19 and compromise of such an issue as long as the settlement is 20 fair and reasonable in the circumstances. Indeed, as this 21 Court previously noted, the law prefers compromise to 22 litigation.

23 Now, our case here is slightly more complicated than 24 Collins & Aikman because the agreement that gave rise to the 25 disputed lien, the 2009 collateral agreement, is a separate

1 agreement from the swap agreement, which is the agreement 2 that gave rise to the swap counterparties' actual claim 3 against the city in this bankruptcy case. The objectors have 4 taken the position that the city could secure a release of 5 liens by court -- by a court order declaring the liens 6 invalid rendering the swap counterparties' claims unsecured.
7 However, this position ignores the very real risk of a court
8 finding that the city's obligations to the swap 9 counterparties cannot be impaired due to the safe harbors for 10 swap agreements in the Bankruptcy Code. See In re. Iridium 11 Operating, LLC, 478 F.3d 452, Second Circuit, 2007. In that 12 case, the Court affirmed the Bankruptcy Court's approval of a 13 settlement of disputed liens where avoiding the liens 14 involved an expensive and complex lawsuit which, even if 15 ultimately successful, offered little reward and 16 acknowledging that the liens held out promise for all 17 creditors.

18           Here the Court pauses to make an important point.
19 The major purpose and the ultimate affect of the settlement
20 agreement is that the disputed liens on the casino revenues 21 will be released. Indeed, assuming an effective date of 22 October 15th, 2014, the settlement agreement is quite likely 23 to be the fastest, surest, and least costly way for the city 24 to achieve that goal. The city places great importance on 25 that goal in achieving its reorganization, and the record

1 supports that judgment.

2 For purposes of the collateral structure objections
3 then, the only significant difference between the Collins & 4 Aikman settlement and the one before the Court today is that 5 in Collins & Aikman settlement agreement provided that Huron 6 Mold would receive the $350,000 lump sum payment within three 7 days of the Court's approval of the settlement at which point 8 the secured claim would be deemed fully paid and satisfied.
9 The mold releases -- the mold liens would be released and 10 discharged. Here, of course, the city seeks to pay the swap 11 counterparties over time, but the settlement agreement on the 12 liens and the release of the liens is essentially the same.
13 Once the $85 million settlement amount is paid, the liens 14 will be released.

15 Thus, the only question remains is whether the delay
16 in the release of the liens until the $85 million is paid 17 means, as the objectors contends, that the Court cannot 18 approve this settlement. Stated another way, the issue is 19 whether the delayed discharge of the disputed liens amounts 20 to an approval by this Court of the disputed liens. The 21 Court finds that the answer to this issue is no for several 22 reasons. First, as confirmed at the April 3rd hearing, the 23 city is not seeking a finding that the disputed liens conform 24 to the requirements of the Michigan Gaming Control and 25 Revenue Act. At the hearing, the swap counterparties agreed

1 to remove the language from the proposed order approving the 2 settlement which provides that the liens are and shall 3 continue to be valid, binding, perfected, and enforceable.
4 The proposed order does foreclose any challenges to the 5 liens, but the need for any such challenge is obviated by the 6 settlement agreement itself, which provides for the discharge 7 of the liens upon payment of the reduced settlement amount.

8           Second, the Court accepts and finds reasonable the 9 swap counterparties' need for the lien to ensure that the 10 city fulfills its obligations under the settlement agreement.
11 The city does not have the resources to pay the full 12 settlement amount now. If the city sought a loan to pay the 13 settlement, as it did in the last attempt to settle with the 14 swap counterparties, the collateral structure objections
15 raised here would be clearly baseless because the liens
16 granted in the collateral agreement would be discharged 17 immediately as in Collins & Aikman. And it is likely that 18 the repayment terms of the settlement would provide a better 19 deal than -- for the city than any loan would. In the 20 settlement, the city gets credit for payments already made 21 this year. Also, the interest rate does not -- the interest 22 does not begin to accrue until after plan confirmation, and 23 the city is not required to incumber any new property or to 24 pay commitment fees, which, as we know, can be substantial.
25 The city is not required to incumber any new property or to

1 pay any such commitment fees. The preservation of the status
2 quo in the settlement agreement until the settlement amount 3 is paid and the disputed liens are released is, thus, a 4 substantial net gain for the city, its residents, and its 5 creditors. Given the facts of the case and the troubling 6 history between the city and the swap counterparties, the 7 Court finds that the settlement structure is reasonable and 8 that the settlement structure warrants the Court's approval 9 of the settlement agreement.

10 Finally, it has been argued that the plan support 11 provision of the settlement agreement is somehow unfair in 12 that it creates an impaired accepting class as required for 13 confirmation of the city's plan on a cramdown basis under 14 Section -- excuse me -- under 11 U.S.C., Section 1129(a)(10), 15 and that the city can use this to its advantage in 16 negotiating with other creditors. To some extent, this is a 17 plan confirmation issue. Nevertheless, the Court will now 18 comment that there is nothing unusual or unfair about this.
19 It is not inconsistent with either the language or the spirit
20 of the Bankruptcy Code. To the contrary, Chapters 9 and 11
21 are explicitly designed to promote negotiation, settlement, 22 and compromise, and Section 1129(a)(10) of the Bankruptcy
23 Code does precisely that, and there's no reason to believe 24 that this section should have any different purpose or effect
25 in Chapter 9.

1           The impact of this is that, subject to the other 2 requirements of Chapters 9 and 11, the city's plan of 3 adjustment may well now be eligible for confirmation on a 4 cramdown basis without any further agreement by creditors.
5 Indeed, this prospect was enhanced earlier this week when the 6 city announced its settlement with certain unlimited tax 7 general obligation bondholders. The message is that now is 8 the time to negotiate, not on the eve of the confirmation 9 hearing in July, nor even in June or in May but now. The 10 Court, once again, urges the city, the retirement parties, 11 and the other creditors in the case to follow the example 12 that the city, UBS, Merrill Lynch, and the UTGO parties have 13 set with their settlements, with the settlement here approved 14 today and that the city and the UTGO bondholders set with 15 their settlement.

16           The Court specifically commends the parties and 17 their attorneys involved in the swap settlement approved here 18 today. They could easily have been discouraged by this 19 Court's rejection of the last settlement and hardened their 20 positions into full-blown litigation. Instead, they chose to 21 reengage. This was plainly a challenging negotiations -- 22 negotiation, but they persisted, and in doing so, they 23 demonstrated the very spirit of cooperation and compromise
24 that the Court urges upon all of the parties in negotiating 25 the remaining unsettled claims.

1           The Court feels compelled to make one further 2 comment about the parties' conduct of this case. It is 3 apparent that each of the parties here is waging an 4 orchestrated public relations campaign in an effort to 5 advance their positions. Indeed, we saw evidence of this 6 again just yesterday. The Court calls upon the parties and 7 their attorneys and their leadership to give serious 8 consideration to whether this is really in their best 9 interests or, on the other hand, whether it is actually 10 counterproductive to the ultimate resolution of this case.
11 This bankruptcy case is not about who wins in the court of 12 public opinion. This case is about the application of the 13 Bankruptcy Code to the city's bankruptcy case, and it's about 14 enhancing both the city's future and creditor recoveries by 15 using the most efficient and effective avenue available. In 16 that -- in this case, that avenue is certainly not a public 17 relations campaign, nor is it a litigation campaign for years 18 at great expense. That avenue is a campaign of all-out good 19 faith mediation and negotiation as demonstrated by the 20 parties to the swap settlement and the UTGO settlement.

21           Motivated by absolutely nothing more than a fervent 22 commitment to public service, Chief Judge Rosen and his team 23 have embraced this Court's call to assist the parties in 24 resolving the complex issues in this case. They have done so 25 with unprecedented dedication, enthusiasm, energy,

1 creativity, and resourcefulness and all despite the fact that 2 each of them otherwise have full-time jobs. The mediation 3 team remains committed to the mediation process, and the 4 Court urges the parties with unsettled claims to take full 5 advantage of that opportunity and to leave the alternative of 6 litigation with its attendant extraordinary expense and delay 7 to an absolutely last resort.

8 Finally, to complete the record, to the extent that 9 the Court has not addressed any objections to the settlement 10 that the parties have asserted, the Court concludes that 11 these objections do not warrant discussion, and they are 12 overruled.

13 The motion to approve the settlement is granted.
14 The city may submit an order. Anything further at this time?

15 MR. HERTZBERG: No. Thank you, your Honor.

16 THE COURT: All right. We'll be in recess.

17 THE CLERK: All rise. Court is adjourned.
